The New Health Foundation has a main focus on the development, support and training required to create compassionate communities and cities. As a part of this effort, they designed the All with You Method, an intensive training course and a collection of resources that are essential in the success of a compassionate community or city.

The All with You Method draws from key elements of top international standards and characteristics established by the World Health Organization and Public Health and Palliative Care International Charter for compassionate communities and cities, and are complimented with in-house tools and resources, as well as step-by-step support from the All with You team.

Phases of the Assessment Process

1. Identification of the sponsoring entity
   Generally companies, hospitals, universities, foundations, not-for-profit organizations and city councils, that will promote the project in their community or city.

2. Scope and map of stakeholders
   The selection of the population, participating centres, activities and the local area for coordination, the creation of the map of stakeholders and building social capital.

3. Baseline analysis and action plan
   Identifying resources and processes to make a compassionate community or city possible. Defining the action plan to achieve the proposed goals.

4. Putting the project into action
   Once the processes have been rehearsed and revised by the All with You team, the activities designed are put into action. This enables the leading group to identify opportunities for improvement and perfect their approaches.

5. Recognition as a Compassionate community or city
   Following the verification, by the All with You team, the activities being conducted, the group will receive recognition as compassionate community or city. To promote the work being accomplished and encourage increased participation in the movement, this milestone will be reported in various news sites, social media and website of the New Health Foundation.
